Associated Students General Election: Today

Voter turnout expected to increase

By J.E. Espino

DAILY STAFF WRITER

Cori Miller, the activities coordinator and student elections board adviser, said she expects the voter turnout for Wednesday and Thursday to be about 5,000.

Whereas, in previous years, turnout for the Associated Student general elections have been close to 2,000, this year more students are interested in the elections, she said, because of the measures for the replacement of bylaws and the activity fee increase for construction of a new recreation center.

To vote, Miller said students need to present their Tower Card with a valid Spring 2001 enrollment sticker, but if they do not have either, they can bring a valid photo I.D. to the polls to have their names crossed off of the enrollment list.

Students can vote from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m.

in front of the Clark Library or near Sweeney Hall (Seventh and San Carlos streets).

Voting begins at 9 a.m. and closes at 2:30 p.m. at the 10th Street garage. Finally, students can also vote in front of the Student Union until 3:30 p.m.

Miller said one of the elements she liked about this year's general elections was the fact that the Impact Party was promoting students to vote through a campaign called "Get Out the Vote."

Maribel Martinez, presidential candidate of the Impact Party, or "Innovative Members Promoting Advocacy, Change and Trust," said she felt it was necessary to tell students to vote, regardless of their preference of party.

"It's the day before elections, and students don't even know there's an election tomorrow," Martinez said.

Eric Canoy, a mechanical engineering major, said he has seen fliers around campus announcing the Associated Student elections, but does not feel he and the majority of students on campus have enough access to learn about what A.S. can do for them.

Canoy said he, however, plans to vote. "I'll probably vote to voice my opinion," he said.

Measure T may alter face of A.S.

By Christina Lucarotti

DAILY SENIOR STAFF WRITER

Akbar Shetty, the Associated Students director of governing affairs, said he wholeheartedly supports Measure T because he thinks it would increase student representation on A.S.

Approval of the measure would replace current A.S. bylaws and change the structure and functions of San Jose State University's student government.

"If students want someone who represents them, who shares their major and experiences, they should go for this," said Shetty, who was responsible for rewriting the A.S. bylaws as seen on the ballot of today's and Thursday's general election.

Currently, A.S. is made up of 13 at-large directors, a president, vice president and controller.

According to Shetty, the document was written with the purposes of being legally compliant, representative of students and increasing advocacy.

Sam Casas, the A.S. director of legislative affairs, said the amendment is flawed for several reasons.

"It's a noble effort to try to make changes. The problem is the total replacement of the bylaws, unless we're becoming a new organization," Casas said. "But we're not. We're still A.S."

Casas contends that for students to make a clear decision regarding the bylaws, they need to see what has been stricken and replaced. On the ballot, however, the proposed bylaws appear as one document.

The amendment, which needs a two-thirds majority to pass, would separate the government and corporate responsibilities of A.S. by creating two boards, the student council and the board of directors.

Casas said he believes the members of the pro-

Robots clash in science competition

By George Moore

DAILY STAFF WRITER

A competition of robots is scheduled for this Friday and Saturday at the San Jose State University Event Center.

It marks the third year that the For Inspiration and Recognition of Science and Technology regional competition will be held in Silicon Valley.

Jason Morrella, the organization's regional director, said that it is difficult to put the event into words.

"It's hard to explain it to someone," Morrella said. "You can't comprehend it until you actually see it. It really is a unique event."

Morrella said the Silicon Valley Regional is featuring 52 teams and their robots, built by high school students and professional engineers. He said the competition is one of 13 nationwide, in which more than 530 teams will compete.

The event, which is free and open to the public, was described by James Beck, director of lifelong learning at SJSU's engineering department, as a

Associated Students General Election:
Proposed Recreation Center

Students divided on Measure S

By Jena Torres

DAILY STAFF WRITER

The current recreational facilities on campus are inadequate, according to Jason Pfister, a junior majoring in aerospace engineering.

The facilities are overcrowded and the equipment is poor, he said.

Today, students will vote on Measure S, the referendum to increase student fees to fund a $28 million state-of-the-art recreation center.

But Pfister said he wishes the money from a fee increase could go toward more important projects on campus.

"Why don't they worry about having more classes here instead?" he asked. "If they do it, fine, but I wish they'd improve academics instead of worrying about that. But, I guess any improvement helps."

Marios Stylianou, a senior majoring in computer engineering, agreed that there are more important projects than a new recreation center.

"We already have a recreation center," Stylianou said. "If there's going to be a fee increase, they should renovate the existing one. I don't think they should waste all that space on another recreation center. If they want to waste space and build something, they should build a parking structure or something."

Other students, however, think building the new recreation center, even if it means an increase in fees, is a good idea.

"Some people pay more for a gym membership," said Roderick Garcia, a senior majoring in mechanical engineering.

Vera Belenky, a sophomore majoring in international business, said she doesn't mind the fee

Students buzz to Palm Pilot demonstration

By Kevin Higuchi

DAILY STAFF WRITER

A crowd of nearly 50 students gathered next to the Spartan Bookstore on Tuesday, grabbing free T-shirts and hats and waiting to find out who would be drawn as the winner of the Palm Pilot raffle.

One minute before the 3 p.m. drawing, students were still filling out registration cards to enter the free raffle for a brand new M100 series Palm Pilot.

"I used to have a Palm IIIx, but it got stolen," said junior advertising major Alex Horikawa, as he filled out the registration card.

Representatives from Palm Incorporated had a table set up in front of the bookstore promoting the new Palm 505 series electric organizer that is scheduled to hit stores in May.

The table also displayed Palm Pilots that were available at the bookstore. The Palm representatives also offered answers and new software for those who already own Palm products.

According to Gary Troupe, a co-event-market-

OPPOSING

Does SJSU need a new recreation center?

VIEWS

Universities need to stress more than academia; recreation enhances campus life

As a transfer student from San Francisco State University, I can attest to the fact that without a decent recreation center, the campus environment suffers. In short, there is nowhere to go at SFSU. There is a baseball diamond, some tennis courts and a few gymnasiums — nothing spectacular.

And the university certainly offered few recreation opportunities for the nonathletic student.

As it stands, San Jose State University is essentially in the same boat.

But the $28 million recreation center that has been proposed for our campus would change all that. While it has drawn criticism because of an increase in student fees, the proposal would benefit SJSU in many ways. One way is it would increase the campus' attractiveness to incoming students.

Other CSU campuses, such as San Diego State University, are known for having useful student recreation centers. In turn, those facilities make the campuses fuller and more well-rounded.

Although I transferred to SJSU for its academics, not a recreation center, the proposal still sounds great.

First, this would be an ideal time to build the 98,000-square-foot center, which may be built at the corner of Seventh and San Carlos streets.

If we miss out on the opportunity now, at a time when the university is planning to raze the red brick Residence Halls and build a new housing development on campus, the land may never be available again.

"We have to act now," Alfonso De Alba, the executive director of Associated Students, told the Daily in February. "We cannot wait to get the land. We cannot wait to take a forward step and do what we think needs to be done for the students."

Second, some students have complained that the gymnasium facilities on campus are either inadequate or unavailable when they need them.

Associated Students is sometimes forced to move campus recreation programs because of conflicts over space in the Event Center.

The proposed recreation center would eliminate any space conflicts.

"The demand for recreation is great," A.S. Controller Carlos Aguirre told the Daily earlier this month. "We, the students, have a unique opportunity to affect and change campus life."

The biggest downside to the proposal is the increase in student fees.

Currently $6 per semester, the Associated Students activity fee would be raised by $50 per semester for the 2002-2003 school year, $75 for the 2003-2004 school year and $100 for the 2005 school year.

While the increase is indeed quite large, it's no more extravagant than a gym membership, which can cost hundreds of dollars per month.

Chris Koperniak, manager of campus recreation for A.S., told the Daily the best way to pay for the center is with student fees.

"The only way this can be built is through students' funds," he said. "The state funds academic buildings first."

I know some students are opposed to the center because they say a campus should chiefly fund academic endeavors, such as new classrooms and computer labs.

But I think universities are a place for students to grow not only academically, but socially as well.

And this center, because of its convenience and accessibility, will encourage students to socialize on campus.

The center is slated to contain more than nine features, such as an indoor jogging track and a health-food court, that are currently not available on campus.

Those features alone will expand students' recreation options at SJSU.

Combined with the bit of status the center will add to our campus, the proposal, if approved during the A.S. election, will add to our school.

There's no reason to vote it down.

Jordan Robertson is a Spartan Daily Staff Writer.

Price for new facility is too high; SJSU students have enough expenses to pay

The middle class and the lower middle class, where most college students fit in, are about to disappear because of a lack of affordable housing. Who cares about a state-of-the-art recreation center when the Bay Area lacks affordable housing? Shelter and parking are far more important than recreation. Bay Area households already spend an average of $7,150 a year in transportation, according to an article published by the San Jose Mercury News.

San Jose is not a transit-accessible city. The farther it is for students to commute to their school, the more difficult it will be for them to engage in recreational activities.

Why not build a parking lot in the proposed location for the recreation center instead? More students will benefit from that.

Furthermore, the increase in student fees for the proposed 97,000-square-foot recreation center at San Jose State University is too high.

If Measure S is approved, the student activity fee will increase from the current $6 to $56 per semester during the 2002-2003 school year. That's a 933 percent increase.

It's difficult for some students to pay the current $6 for the activity fee when many don't use the current recreation center. It's worse yet for them to pay an additional $50 increase.

That's just the initial fee, though.

During the 2003-2004 school year it will increase from $56 to $81. And during the 2004-2005 school year, the fee will go up from $81 to $106. That's an additional 33 percent increase.

The most dramatic fee adjustment could come after 2005, because the increase will be based on the San Francisco Bay Area Consumer Price Index. That's an undefined fee increase.

Only time can tell what it may be.

Last month, the Bureau of Labor Statistics released the national consumer price index for January. It presented a distressing jump of 0.6 percent from December, twice as much as economists had expected.

Many students have problems keeping up with local inflation already. According to an article published by the San Francisco Chronicle, inflation in the Bay Area has been higher than the national average for about four years.

Since about 1997 the Bay Area's inflation rate has been exceeding the nation's rate because of soaring housing costs — a 30 percent increase in 2000 alone for renting or buying a home.

When students have these expenses to worry about, an additional expense for campus recreation is hard to justify.

The worst of it is that average hourly earnings, increasing by only 0.4 percent between November and December, don't increase in line with the consumer price index.

The approval of Measure S would hurt those individuals with limited resources who may be interested in attending SJSU. They may find the activity fees too high and may become discouraged. SJSU has plans to become a trimester school system as early as next summer. This could translate into more fee increases, because the university will collect three fees during the school year and not two as it currently does. Has this been addressed in the language of the measures?

Although the proposed recreation center features are attractive — an indoor jogging track, an outdoor adventure center, personal training, a sauna, a whirlpool spa, a health-food court, full-scale locker rooms and more — it's one thing to appreciate the finer things in life and another thing to be able to afford them.

The Event Center and the rest of the facilities on campus are sufficient for recreation, because they have the equipment necessary for a workout. If anything, upgrades could be done to them to attract more students.

Advocates of the measure say the new recreation center will be a gathering place for students on campus. My question is: What's the big deal about gathering in such a fancy place for a fee, when students can meet elsewhere for free?

Vote 'No' on Measure S. Housing, parking and keeping up with inflation are far more important than diversion.

Rest and relaxation during break

Spring break is officially two days away, and nobody could be happier than me. The break means the end of midterms and, more importantly, the halfway mark of the semester.

It means that summer break is a mere month-and-a-half away when we return.

It means that we won't have to go to classes for a whole week — if we ever went at all.

It means that it's time to party.

It's time for students to take a well-deserved break because it's hard sitting through all those lectures when the sun's shining outside making the air indoors stifling and mucky.

Students should get out of town, or if you're a homebody like me, actually stay home for one full day.

I tend to forget what my house looks like in the daylight — so I'll stay home for a day, in my pajamas and read a book or watch a movie.

It doesn't really matter, just as long as I can relax.

I also plan to get reacquainted with my family.

I'll have a conversation with my 13-year-old brother that consists of more than just, "It's late, and you should be in bed."

I plan to say more to my parents than a whispered, "I'm home," when I creep in the house at midnight.

MICHELLE

And I want to take my German shepherd for a walk instead of ushering him into my room at night when it's too late to do anything but sleep.

I want to enjoy a home-cooked meal for the first time in months.

Maybe spend some time with my boyfriend outside of the newsroom.

But after that, I could go out and have lots of fun.

I could go to Santa Cruz and surf.

Of course, I don't know how to surf, so I'd probably get knocked off the board, hit on the head with it, sink to the bottom of the ocean and get eaten by a shark.

But I wouldn't have to come to work next Monday.

I could go down to Monterey and scuba dive.

I don't know how to do that either, so I'd either hyperventilate or die of asphyxiation and a shark would surely eat me.

Either way, I wouldn't have to come to work next Monday.

Maybe I should drive to Mexico, go surfing and get really drunk.

If the drive didn't maim me in any way, and the surfing sharks didn't get me, then the cops would.

I could be a public nuisance, get arrested, be thrown into jail and not have to come into work next Monday.

It would kind of be like an extended vacation.

Or I could ride in a helicopter in San Francisco — you know, the tourist attraction that passes over and under the Golden Gate Bridge.

But accidents happen, and maybe the helicopter would run out of gas, or something else would happen and make it plummet headfirst into the bay.

The darn sharks would eat me again, and I wouldn't have to come to work next Monday.

Then again, I hate sharks, and I actually do like working at the Daily.

Maybe I'll just stay home after all.

My dog will protect me from the sharks.

Spartan Party candidates are more worthy of students' vote

At the beginning of their term, the members of the Associated Students Board of Directors signed a Memorandum of Understanding to hold themselves accountable to the students. They agreed to visit at least one student organization per month and address three issues per semester in exchange for their stipends.

Prior to campaigning, Maribel Martinez had visited only one student organization: her sorority. Corina Herrera had also visited only one organization: her own, Movimiento Estudiantil Chicano de Aztlan, or MEChA. Nothing was put on the agenda on their behalf. The remainder of the year, they forgot about their agreement, yet promptly collected their stipends.

Michelle Johnson and Akbar Shetty visit multiple student organizations every week and address important issues at every board meeting.

Together they have created a Book Loan program, organized a voter registration drive, successfully assisted individual students in dealing with Admissions and Records, fought to include more student input in the housing project, expanded the Laptop Rental Program and much more. The list could go on forever. I would encourage everyone to come to the A.S. office and read the minutes for yourself.

When I withdrew my candidacy for A.S. president, I said I would endorse the candidates that I felt would best represent students. After analyzing the candidates and their platform, I have reached the following conclusion: The Spartan Party candidates are proactive — they try to provide solutions to the issues that affect students the most. The Impact Party consists of a reactive group of people whose principle stand is to oppose whatever the Spartan Party proposes. Further investigation would reveal that special interest groups, especially those departments that feel threatened by strong student leadership, are behind Maribel Martinez and the Impact Party.

The choice is simple: Support those who have sat around all year collecting monthly checks, or elect those who have worked all year for you.

Proposal for recreation center illogical and unfair to students

I'm replying to the current proposal assembled by the Associated Students Campus Recreation program. I feel that a new recreation center serves no purpose except the university's desire for more glamour.

We already have an existing recreation center, which is used by only a small percentage of students who attend San Jose State University.

To build a new recreation center instead of renovating the existing one is not logical. That is like demolishing a fairly new car with hardly any problems for a brand new car because the older one didn't have power windows and door locks, a 10-speaker audio system, leather seats and cruise control.

The proposal is unnecessary and should be revised so that we can renovate the one we already have, rather than spending $28 million we don't have in creating a new one.

In addition, a new rec center will charge students more every semester starting next fall, and they will not be able to use the facility until after it is built.

Theoretically, the present students at SJSU are going to be asked to pay for a $28 million facility that will not benefit them while they attend this school.

This proposal is unfair and shouldn't be passed. The school should find other means to create the funds to make this project go forward. It is not the responsibility of present students to make the school better for future students.

Benjamin Santos

Enhanced facilities may attract more students to university

It looks like San Jose State University is building a new recreation facility that is useful for students. I feel that we do need a new facility, because it adds something new to the campus. Even though fees would increase and many of the current students would have graduated, the rec center would be useful for incoming students.

If we refused to have a new center, we would be selfish. Besides, alumni can always come back and use the recreation center, therefore we have no reason to stop the college from building it.

Nowadays, when students decide which college to attend, they look at what a college provides. Expense would be an issue, but the most important thing about a school is what it offers.

I assume that students put in their opinion that we need another recreation center. The topic wouldn't have come up randomly by the school government.

I know that having a new recreation center will provide a good future for the students at SJSU. It would present a new environment and new experiences with open centers, which students can attend.

ELECTIONS: Board hopes student participation will rise

According to Canoy, voter turnout is low but could be higher if A.S. was more visible on campus.

He said the university is a commuter school, and the students do not have enough time to get involved in student government.

Guillermo Mendoza said he was not sure if he was going to vote. He said he did not know the elections were this week.

"I've never been informed what they (A.S.) do," Mendoza said.

Chloe Ngikeszenski, a hospitality major, said that although she had not seen much information, she planned to go to the library computers to look up information about the two measures on the ballot.

"My opinion counts too," she said.

For Kristi Calcagno, time is preventing her from going out to vote, she said.

"I am not educated about any of the issues," she said.

Calcagno, a student in the teaching-credential program, said she and more students would probably vote if the elections were held via the Internet.

She said that when she was a student at UC Davis the students held their elections using the Internet, and she was able to vote from her house instead of standing in line.

When she tried to vote at this campus, she said, the students were not even making a line but clumped around the voting table.

"Gosh, I don't have 20 minutes to stand there and wait before I could even vote," Calcagno said.

She said she thinks it is curious that current issues, such as the new recreation center initiative, do not benefit the students who vote for them.

"In a way you want other people to benefit from other things you didn't have," she said. "But why should I pay for things I'm not going to use?"

CENTER: Students claim they can't afford rec center fee increase, others say proposed fee schedule isn't overwhelming

increase that would start at $50 per semester in the 2002-2003 school year.

"The tuition is so big that $50 doesn't make a difference," Belenky said. "I don't like the gym they have now, so I don't go there. It's not like a real gym. It's very small. They don't have many exercise machines."

If the measure to increase fees for the new center passes, students will pay an extra $75 per semester during 2003-2004 and an extra $100 per semester during the 2004-2005 year.

After 2005, the increase will be based on the local inflation rate.

Senior Rami Karadshe said the fee increases are minimal.

"For me, the fee increase is not a big deal," Karadshe said. "It's more of a convenience. I spend most of my day at school. Fifty dollars, $75, $100 — that's not that big of an increase."

Some students, however, said they cannot afford the fee increase.

"The (recreation center) is good, but I don't know if I can afford to pay since I'm from a low-income family," said freshman Bang Le.

Araceli Valle, a junior majoring in administration of justice, said she thinks most students won't be able to afford the fee increases.

"It's really expensive," Valle said. "I think things are fine the way they are. Especially in Silicon Valley, I don't think people can afford to pay any more than they already pay."

Some students said they thought it was unfair to make students who won't use the center pay for it.

"I wouldn't take advantage of it," said Jennifer Devera, a junior majoring in child development. "For those who don't use it, the pay increase isn't relevant."

Per semester, campus recreation serves 5,000 of the approximately 27,000 students on campus.

"I don't think it's right," sophomore Carlos Villarreal said. "Not everyone's going to use it. They're forcing us to pay for something not a lot of people are going to use."

Marjorie Viernes, a junior majoring in accounting, disagreed, saying that she would definitely benefit from better recreational facilities.

"The gym we have now is really small," she said. "During busy hours, it's impossible to work out. Once in a while, I go in there and you can't use any machines because they're being occupied."

Although some say the proposed center will bring a sense of community to the campus, other students say it would be unnecessary because most students live off campus.

"I don't think it should be built," said sophomore Mick Barairo. "It's a commuter school. Everyone's just in and out. I go into the gym, and not many people are there. It would be different if it wasn't a commuter school. It would be a waste to charge students more."

Computer science major Julie Parks said she does not see the need for a new center, either.

"I don't personally want to see my fees increase because: One, I'm not going to be here to enjoy it, and two, I don't see anything wrong with the facilities we have now," she said. "I've gone in there and seen hardly anyone working out."

BYLAWS: Critics say new A.S. document is unclear

posed student council should be able to handle making decisions regarding student issues as well as corporate issues, such as approval of A.S.'s annual budget.

Under the proposed bylaws, a representative from each college and the graduate program would be elected to the council as well as five at-large student representatives and representatives from various student organizations.

"The good thing is you wouldn't just have 13 people making decisions for 27,000 students," Shetty said.

The board of directors would be made up of the president, controller, the council president, two students appointed by the president and two council members.

The freedom of the president to appoint two students to the board of directors has also been an issue of debate.

According to Casas, members of that board should be elected by the student population, not appointed by the president.

Whereas the student council would handle the government duties of A.S., the board would take care of its corporate matters.

The position of vice president would have more power and would be responsible for appointing the chairs of committees, said Shetty, who is currently running for A.S. vice president under the Spartan Party.

Although advocates of Measure T have cited creating diversity within A.S. as a main reason for changing the bylaws, opponents of the measure have said that the document itself received no student input while being created and is too vague to be voted on.

"It's not a completely developed document, so I don't even think it should be on the ballot for students," said Maribel Martinez, the A.S. director of campus climate and presidential candidate for the Impact Party.

Spartan Party presidential candidate Michelle Johnson, on the other hand, supports the bylaws amendment.

"As much as A.S. tries to know the needs of every student, it's too difficult," said Johnson, who is the director of community affairs. "If we have students represented from every college, we'd know the needs of students."

Jumping in HEAD FIRST

Diver Tracy Harkins grew out of gymnastics to become Spartans' first conference champion

By Karen Kabiling

DAILY STAFF WRITER

Freshman Tracy Harkins said she used to jump off the roofs of houses when she was little.

Little did she know that the amusing childhood pastime was a sign — she became the first Spartan to take first place in a Western Athletic Conference swimming or diving event Feb. 24.

Harkins, 19, said she didn't even know about the feat until after she won.

"It was really cool," Harkins said. "I didn't know I was the first one."

With a score of 336.25, Harkins was one of three of the 14 divers to score more than 300 points, beating runner-up Christine Bulmer of the University of Nevada by 17.60 points.

Harkins earned all-conference honors, and became the only San Jose State University athlete to win in this year's championship meet.

Moreover, Harkins' winning dive was one of three school records and one National Collegiate Athletic Association Championship provisional qualifying mark set by the university.

This was a job well done, considering she has only been diving for about two years.

Harkins, originally from Lancaster, Calif., said that before diving, she had aspirations to become a gymnast. However, a sprained and partially dislocated knee left her in crutches for six months and eventually led her to the water.

"Diving was something to do while my knee was getting better," Harkins said.

Her father, Fred Harkins, agreed that diving was a better choice, considering her condition.

"The diving board was easier on her knee. She couldn't do the vault, because her knee couldn't take it," Harkins said. "Diving was much easier on it than gymnastics."

Harkins said his daughter had a strong interest in gymnastics.

At age 9, he said, Tracy was playing on the monkey bars when she found out about enrolling in Genesis Gymnastics in Lancaster to learn more about the sport.

She was a natural in gymnastics from the very beginning, but her father said she literally started to grow out of it.

Fred Harkins said most gymnasts' average height is about 4 feet 11 inches, and Tracy said she now stands at about 5 feet 9 inches.

At 17, after seven and a half years of gymnastics, Tracy Harkins seized the opportunity by competing in club diving.

To get to practice, Tracy had to travel 150 miles round trip, three to four times per week, and her father said that just sounded crazy to him.

Both Tracy and her father recall him opposing her traveling such a distance to practices by saying, "She's not going to run the wheels off the car."

But she did anyway and proved it was well worth the mileage.

She won several diving championships with the Rose Bowl Aquatic Center in Lancaster and at the Trojan Dive Club at the University of Southern California.

She also traveled to Oregon, Washington, Texas, and Northern California for club diving meets.

From there, she was seen and recruited with a full scholarship to SJSU by diving coach Bill Boos.

"It was like love at first sight,"

Boos said. "I was impressed with her form and line."

Boos said he was a good friend of Harkins' former coach, Alik Sarkisyan, who was a coach for the Russian Olympic team, and told him that he wanted to recruit her to SJSU.

And he did.

Boos said he thought Tracy was a blessing sent from heaven.

She had the talent and the competitive drive.

Harkins deserved everything she has accomplished because she has worked so hard for it, Boos said.

"From the beginning I knew that she can become great," Boos said. "She's the sweetest person, and I have a lot of respect for her."

Harkins and Rachel Dutra are the only two students who make up the SJSU diving team.

Dutra, a freshman, said she has been diving since she was a freshman in high school and was used to having more people on team, but having Tracy by her side during practice kept her going.

"I get a lot more done," Dutra said. "We've built a cool friendship."

She has gotten to know Tracy more by being on the road and rooming together.

"I'm proud of everything she's done this year," Dutra said. "She's accomplished a lot."

Tracy strives for more than just the win.

"She's always the same," Fred Harkins said. "She doesn't interpret it as a competition."

Tracy's accomplishments have made both her parents proud, including her mother, Pat Harkins.

She said Tracy's diving involved a significant change in her life, driving her to and from practices — watching and waiting.

But Pat said it was well worth it.

They shared a bond that brought them closer and closer to one another, and Pat said she definitely misses it now that her daughter is away from home.

"I'm proud of her, and she's done it all on her own," Pat said. "She's a self-motivator. No one had to holler at her."

This is because Tracy said she takes pride in what she does.

"I work hard every day. God willing, what will happen will happen," Tracy said.

Being Christian, she said she listens to what God says in the Bible and recites a few verses, reminding herself to be strong and courageous.

Tracy said winning isn't everything and that she is more concerned with doing the best she can.

"The Olympics would be cool," Tracy said. "I'm thankful for this excellent opportunity."

She said she has dived with a number of Olympic athletes and respects their accomplishments.

"Being in an environment with so many strong divers was really beneficial to see people working hard at what they're doing," Tracy said. "It was a good opportunity to train in that situation."

During the off-season, Tracy said she continues to practice in different ways.

She practices three hours per day five days out of the week with the SJSU diving team, and also coaches for the Santa Clara Dive Club, a junior Olympic diving program.

Tracy said she is also practicing and learning new dives off the 10-meter platform for the Senior Zone Meet in April.

She is currently aiming for a degree in kinesiology, but said that in her mind, her goals change almost every week.

Like most students, Tracy said she is enjoying the sunny, warm weather and can't wait to go home for Spring Break.

Even when she's not practicing, Tracy said she enjoys being in the water.

She has come a long way from jumping off a roof.

Now she uses a diving board.

"Diving is something I do," Tracy said. "It's not who I am, but I do enjoy it."

San Jose State University

diver Tracy Harkins won first place for platform diving at the Western Athletic Conference championships on Feb. 24. She was the first diver in school history to do so.

ROBOTS: National competition scheduled for Walt Disney World

cross between a rock concert and a sporting event, complete with cheerleaders, referees and time clocks.

Beck said the event helps high school students become excited about the engineering field.

"It helps put science and technology into practical and real situations and allows students to compete with one another," Beck said.

He said at last year's event, students came up to him inquiring about becoming engineering majors.

According to Morrella, the organization provides each team with identical parts and rules. The teams are given six weeks to design, build and test their robots.

The competition involves 40 balls that are approximately 13 inches in diameter and four additional balls measuring about 30 inches in diameter. According to Morrella, there are two 7-foot goals on wheels that the robots must put the balls in to score points. A no-holds-barred event places the robots on both offense and defense.

Dean Kamen, president and owner of DEKA Research & Development Corporation founded the organization in 1989. He developed the first portable kidney dialysis machine in 1993, and recently revolutionized wheelchairs, according to Morrella.

Last June on NBC's "Dateline," he revealed a wheelchair that can climb stairs, roll through sand, and raise its height so the user can reach high places.

Kamen's newest development, known only as "It" has caused much speculation as to what the secret is.

Morrella said Kamen would be in attendance Friday and Saturday at the event, which is estimated to have approximately 2,000 participants and another 2,000 spectators.

According to Morrella, the competition is sponsored by Kleiner Perkins Caufield & Byers, NASA Ames Research Center, Barclays Global Investors, SJSU, Oliver Design and Federal Express.

After the regional competitions, the national championship is scheduled to be held at Walt Disney World's Epcot Center in Orlando, Fla., April 5-7, 2001. The event is estimated to attract 340 teams, according to the company Web site.

Morrella said the regional event begins Thursday with practice rounds in which the robots need to pass inspections and get their final tuneups.

Friday is slated to consist of qualifying rounds from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. with an awards ceremony following, from 4 p.m. to 5 p.m.

The opening ceremonies start at 9 a.m. Saturday, with qualifying rounds ending at noon. The playoffs will be from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m., and the final awards ceremony is scheduled to immediately follow.

PALM PILOTS: Personal digital planner raffled off to students at event

ing road manager, all the Palm Pilots, with the exception of the M100, can store up to eight megabytes of information, such as dates, phone numbers and full-text e-mails.

The most popular models include the V series and the IIIx series, Troupe said.

"I've had mine for about three months now," said Malik Miles, a junior majoring in administration of justice. "It's a good way to keep addresses and take notes."

The newer units even have a wireless system that gives them the ability to access e-mail accounts anywhere.

"You can get your own e-mail account with the service, which includes a service for maps and the weather," senior accounting major Dragana Crebar said.

Throughout the day, the table had a lot of traffic passing through, Troupe said. He said close to 20 percent of the students who stopped by already owned a Palm Pilot.

For those who had a Palm Pilot, the group handed out Road Scholar, a CD-ROM with software that includes dictionaries and encyclopedias that can be transferred from the user's computer to the Palm Pilot.

As well as CD-ROMs, software can be downloaded from the Internet on Palm's Web site and Handmark's site, a software company that makes software, Troupe said.

In the end, senior business and administration major Darren Behler was drawn and awarded the Palm Pilot.

As the Palm representatives awarded him, others left disappointed.

Paper calls in spirit busters

HONG KONG (AP) — With stories of spirits spreading through the office and some employees scared to work nights, an English-language newspaper called in two Buddhist ghostbusters to try to restore calm.

The robed monks chanted, sprinkled water and rang a bell Tuesday during their traditional cleansing ceremony at the South China Morning Post. Editor Robert Keatley and some staff members bowed at a small altar set up near the reception desk.

The monks declined comment to a reporter, who was kept outside. Keatley's secretary, Winnie Tam, said the half-hour ritual had been organized to allay any fears among staff.

"I am not normally that superstitious," said the food editor, Susan Jung of California.

Boiling out the gas laws...

Sami Balbaky, right, and Krishna Bhakta, both engineering majors, checked a beaker's water temperature during an experiment finding out the ideal gas laws in their chemistry lab in the Science building Tuesday afternoon. This Chemistry 11A class is required for all engineering students at San Jose State University.
